Augustus Pollack, of Wheeling, West Virginia, sending a handsome contribution to the citizens relief committee, writes:

"There was enough already in the condition of our country to make us humble, without adding this terrible calamity to the dire experiences of the period.

Memphis hacks have nearly all been infected with yellow fever by being used for carrying corpses to the grave. Hearses are now seldom used.

The Canada reception Archives of the call's organ, has the following:

We have had enough and more than enough of "the bloody shirt" in our politics. Kearnoy, "the great California agitator" has attempted to introduce a shirt of another color. His effort has not been crowned with the success he seems to have anticipated. The grievances of workingmen are not displayed to advantage by a constant and profuse exhibition of unclean linen on the part of their self-elected representative. And then Kearnay's eloquence is in exact keeping with the appearance of his linen. It is copiously foul and studiously blasphomous. Oratory of this kind advances no cause. It at once kills the speaker and the theory which he advocates. The working classes have undoubtedly great distress to encounter, but much of it is inevitable, and the result of a long combination of causes for which no doubtedly great clastress o encounter, but much of it is inevitable, and the result of a long combination of causes for which no class is answerable. Then again, through all the troubles in finance and business which have afflicted the country of late years, the vast majority of the working classes have had, as they still have, work to do, and there is much work yet to be obtained by those who honestly look for it. Wages must always fluctuate. Employers cannot pay at the same rates in hard times that they can in "flush" times. They suffer with their employes, and many of then have been ruined outright or come to the verge of ruin. All these things should be taken into consideration in labor questions. The grievances and disasters are not all on one side. There must be peace and good will on both sides if ei-

The mortality of the worst day of 1873 is surpassed, and yet the maximum may not have been reached. One day in October, five years ago, Memphis, with 15,000 white people within her city limits, buried eighty, six of the citizens. This was the maximum of the last great visitation of yellow fever-yesterday, with a white population not Yesterday, with a white population morthly support of the property good, to be able to turn five political somersmits in twenty-five years. As the country grew, as population increased, as wealth was accumulated, the necessity for the construction of those roads became apparent, and the eapital of the people accomplished what the young State of Michigan failed to do.

In 1837, while these improvements were going on, there was a failure on the part of the Morris Canal Banking Company, I think to pay the five-million loan. They think to pay the five-million loan. They paid something over two millions, and sus-pended, and the State of Michigan was

True, a portion of it had not been received, and she had not much credit to carry on these works; but the cry went forth, "More money; more money; the laboring classes must have more money; our internal improvements will stop unless we have more money."

The State of Michigan undertook to furnish more money. She granted charters to a large number of State banks, such as the Bank of Pontiac, the Bank of Clinton, the Bank of Pontiac, the Bank of Clinton, the Bank of Pontiac, the continuation of turnish enough money. They wanted "more money:" and in order to snake brief work, and the remedy efficient, she pissed a general banking law, known as the "wild-cat law," anthorizing everybody, everywhere, to start a bank and furnish more money.
